The VFW became the first veterans service organization to distribute poppies as a tribute to fallen World War I veterans. Since 1922, the VFW has conducted poppy drives, making the red flower of remembrance the official flower of the VFW.

Just two years later, on May 20, 1924, the VFW was granted trademark rights for the name Buddy Poppy under the classification of artificial flowers.

To this day, no other organization, firm, or individual can legally use the name Buddy Poppy.

VFW Posts take pride in Buddy Poppy distribution, especially around the Memorial Day holiday. In communities around the world, VFW members stand in front of businesses, on street corners or other high-traffic areas for pedestrians. Donations given in exchange for the Buddy Poppies fund Posts’ veterans relief services, and a portion also goes to the VFW National Home for Children.

“It is important for us as the VFW to commemorate our war dead during the sacred time of Memorial Day,” VFW Programs Director Lynn Rolf said. “We live by the old saying ‘Honoring the Dead by Helping the Living’ and by distributing the Buddy Poppy, we keep this sacred promise alive and well.”

VFW updated its Buddy Poppy distribution last year with the release of a new poppy tin tab. The VFW Store sells both versions for distribution by VFW Posts. Visit <https://www.vfwstore.org> for more information and to place an order.
